

FOREWORD

With this issue, we complete the second year of our journal. Since the very beginning, in 2003, when INTERthesis started to be idealized, its first agents have clearly kept in their minds that their aim was to create an electronic reference room for the community of national and international researchers with interdisciplinary interests in the areas of Studies of Gender, Environment and Society, and Human Condition in Modernity. We are still far from reaching our goals, but we feel honored as we stand before the way we have covered so far. We thank all the authors for trusting us, as well as for the quality of the work sent. This valuable contribution has helped us get closer to our target, and has increased the readers' search for our journal.

The Editors