

EDITORIAL NOTE

The six papers in this issue of Principia have been presented in previous versions at the 7th Principia International Symposium, held in Florianópolis in August 2011, whose main theme was the philosophy of Nelson Goodman. I'd like to thank Catherine Elgin, Oswaldo Chateaubriand, Michel Ghins, Jacques Morizot, Newton da Costa, Wilson Mendonça, and Julia Menezes for their talks at the symposium and for their patience and dedication in improving and revising their papers in order to send them to Principia. Four of these papers deal directly with issues related to Goodman's philosophy, namely Elgin's, Chateaubriand's, Morizot's, and the paper by Mendonça and Menezes. Many other papers delivered at the aforementioned symposium have been published separately in two books in the collection Rumos da Epistemologia, also published by NEL – Epistemology and Logic Research Group of Federal University of Santa Catarina. Some of those other papers deal also with Goodman's philosophy. To all authors, reviewers, and editorial personnel, specially my associate editors, Cezar Mortari and Jaimir Conte, I'd like to thank for their work and dedication.
